

Prioritising Skills and Workforce Development

TRAINING IN BASSETLAW

We recognise that one of the most important assets for businesses is your workforce, and we are committed to ensuring you have the skills base you need to achieve your business growth, as well as the flexibility to develop that base, if market conditions demand.

Our workforce has consistently demonstrated its ability to retrain and develop new capabilities and skills, as the District has successfully shifted from its traditional mining and textile base, to a widely diversified economic structure.

Our regional training providers work with organisations and individuals to customise and tailor services to meet specific needs. This will guarantee your business has the skills base it needs within Bassetlaw and the surrounding areas, allowing you to develop your products and services in accordance with the market.

Bassetlaw's leading training provider is North Nottinghamshire College, an innovative and visionary institution, which in the last five years, has developed state-of-the-art facilities for engineering and food manufacturing and production. The National Fluid Power Centre at North Nottinghamshire College provides programmes in engineering and manufacturing, including Power and Motion Control, Industrial Hydraulics, Power Pneumatics and PLC systems. The team of trainers have experience in large national and international engineering companies (Bosch, Vickers Systems) and can apply real life operational experience to their classes and courses.

The Food Technology Centre, completed in 2004, aims to create a nationally recognised Centre of Excellence for food manufacturing, including state-of-the-art research and demonstration facilities. This has been developed alongside Bassetlaw's nationally renowned companies in the field of food production.

The College is also heavily involved in specialist training for airport and related work, which covers the more technical skills (line maintenance, ticketing and cabin crew), in addition to basic skills such as customer service and health and safety issues.

We also have training providers offering expert guidance in both setting up a business and managing a growing business, qualified to advise on areas such as marketing, sales, finance and human resource management. Our dedicated organisations have staff with practical experience who will help you improve your operational efficiency, streamline your costs, manage your customer relations, promote your products and maximise your human capital.
